What parents need to know about
PUBG (PLAYERUNKNOWN'S BATTLEGROUNDS)

WEAPONS AND VIOLENCE
PEGI has rated the game 16+, due to 'frequent moderate violence towards human characters and encouragement of drug use'. The game is based on fighting for survival, so the inclusion of weapons, such as assault rifles, machine guns, grenades and bow & arrows, violence and death, is inevitable. Although some reviewers have downplayed the gameplay as involving 'just little puffs of non-graphic blood', there's no taking away from the inherently violent nature of the game.

TROLLING ENEMIES
Players are doing whatever they can to aggravate the opposition. Honking virtual car horns, watching a live stream to determine a player's location in a game and other tactics are rife in PUBG. Further to this, the live chat function allows all players to communicate with each other during gameplay which opens up the opportunity for trolling. On occasion the conversation may transition from light humour to serious harassment.

MICRO TRANSACTIONS
Players are offered the opportunity to buy new weapon skins and cosmetics. These items are updated regularly, and they are available to buy using in-game currency known as 'Battle Points'. These are earned through killing people, having a higher survival time and inflicting damage on other players, however for players that don't want to wait, there are 'keys' that opens crates to weapons, skins and cosmetics. All keys cost real money and can be purchased through the Steam marketplace.

OFFENSIVE LANGUAGE
The game's rules of conduct warn against using 'extremely foul language', which suggests some element of foul language still occurs. Some players have complained that a lot of the bad language occurs during the loading zone and on the plane via the in game chat feature. There are also players who use rude/offensive words as part of their usernames and, because it is a live game, it is very difficult to stop users from using bad language and hurtful words.

HACKERS AND CHEATS
Earlier in 2018, PUBG developer Bluehole announced that 15 people had been arrested on suspicion of developing hacking/cheating software as part of an ongoing investigation with 'multiple partners and judicial authorities' in China. Hackers have also been suspected of using viruses to control a game player's PC, scan their data and extract information illegally.

IT CAN BE ADDICTIVE
Games like PUBG and Fortnite have become a huge distraction in schools and due to their competitive nature, children are finding it hard to stop playing the game part way through. Some teachers say children try to find different ways to keep playing the game during class. Parents have also reported that their children have become aggressive and argumentative when they can't play the game.

Top Tips for Parents

TALK TO YOUR CHILD
Always have frequent conversations with your child about their online activity. It's important that they trust you and feel confident to talk about what they experience online, especially if they hear or read something they believe is inappropriate, offensive or makes them feel uncomfortable.

UNDERSTAND WHY THEY PLAY
Online multiplayer games usually have no ending and gamers enjoy creating and building relationships with other players which can provide a community feeling and an escape from reality. Show your child you understand why they enjoy playing but explain to them how easy it is to become dependent on online games.

REPORT ISSUES
If your child has seen or heard anything inappropriate, it's important that they know how to report it. You can report a user in the settings within the game, or you can report users within the community section of the Steam platform. The in-game report system is the fastest way to report a user directly to the PlayerUnknown's Battlegrounds team. Make sure your child knows how to do this if someone in the game upsets them or makes them feel uncomfortable. Anyone that does not follow the rules of conduct will be suspended.

LIMIT GAMING SESSIONS
Games like this can be highly addictive. Take notice of how much time your child is spending on their devices and have a conversation with them about how long you would like them to spend playing games. It can be hard to take them away from a game mid-play, therefore it may be easier to limit the amount of games they play rather than setting a specific time-limit.

REVIEW PAYMENT METHODS
You don't need to pay to play PUBG on your mobile device (you do have to pay on Steam and Xbox) so ensure you have an agreement in place that requires children and teens to ask for parental permission before buying a product. There are also additional in-game purchases - so, if you do not want your child to make payments, ensure that your card is not associated with their account. There is a payment option called Paysafecard, which allows you to make payments online without the use of a bank account or credit card. Because you can top up balances, it makes it easy to control spending.

PROTECT PERSONAL INFO
Your child may unknowingly give away personal information during a game, including their location. Talk to them about what constitutes as 'personal information' and make sure they do not disclose anything to anyone, even to their friends. Advise them to remove any items if they are live streaming themselves playing a game (school uniform, street name etc) that could potentially expose their location or information about them.

AGE LIMIT
Always check age ratings and check the game out yourself before letting a young child play it. Remember that PlayerUnknown's Battleground is rated PEGI 16, so no matter how used to gaming your child is, it doesn't mean this game will be appropriate for them.
